2 Weeks After Raid, Punjab City Seethes

Sikhs of Ludhiana, Officially 'Calm,' Feel Offended and Hindus Are Wary

By Sanjoy Hazarika

LUDHIANA, India - On the surface, life appears normal in this industrial city in the heart of Puniab state, two weeks after Indian roops raided and cleared the Golden Temple in Amritsar of hundreds of Sikh extremists.

The markets are open and crowded, although business is slack. Long lines of Sikhs and Hinduce the cycles, woollen goods, ho-siery and machine parts for which Ludhiana is renowned in other People's Party held its single seat." LUXEMBOURG: The centerright coalition parties lost 1 scat and will now have 4. The opposition Socialists now has 2 scats, up from 1 in 1979.

IRELAND: The apposition Fianna Fail party was set to in-crease its seats from 5 to 8, according to preliminary results. Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald's Fine Gael party also increased its share, going from 4 to 6 seats. Mr. Fitz-Gerald's coalition partners, the Labor Party, was expected to be climinated, losing 4 scats.

Voting for the 434-member Parliament was held in two stages. Britain, Denmark, Ireland and the Netherlands vored Thursday. But results were withheld until the other six EC countries voted Sunday.

The Parliament approves the community's administrative budget and expresses opinions on in-ternational topics but has no lawmaking powers.

Because voters could not chose candidates in other countries and because of the Parliament's limited powers, the election was viewed as an unofficial referendum on national policies.

Britain, Italy, France and West Germany have 81 seats each in the Parliament; the Netherlands has 25; Greece and Belgium, 24 seats each; Denmark, 16; Ireland, 15; and Luxembourg, 6. The balloting for the international advisory body is seen largely as a test of party popularity at home and does not change legislaove representation in any country.

The new Parliament's first session is scheduled for mid-July at its headquarters in Strasbourg, (AP, Reners, NYT)

Mondale to See Bradley Before Others

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Walter F. Mondale Monday put the mayor of Los Angeles. Tom Bradley, at the top of his list of those he will interview this week as a possible vice presidential running mate. Mr. Mondale's press secretary, Maxine Isaacs, said that Mr. Mondale will meet with Mr. Bradley on Thursday in Minnesota.

Mr. Mondale is also to meet with Senator Lloyd M. Beatsen, a Texas Democrat, on Thursday afternoon and San Francisco's mayor, Dianne Feinstein, on Saturday. Mr. Bradley, the black mayor of Los Angeles, narrowly lost the 1982 California governor's election to George Deukmelion a Republican.

In Washington, the 15-member Democratic Platform Drafting Committee, which includes eight Mondale supporters, began writing the party's platform for the fall elections from a rough staff report that contained few details. Representative Geraldine Ferraro, the New York Democrat who is head of the full platform committee, said: "What I'm boping to do is stay away from writing legislation in the platform." The drafting panel will present its recommendations at midweek to the full committee, which will adopt a final version.

U.S. Court to Rule on Lethal Injection

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Supreme Court agreed Monday to consider whether the Food and Drug Administration should investigate drugs used for executions to determine if they are "safe and effective" for killing condemned criminals. Eleven states provide for execution by lethal injection, and 200 of the nearly 1,400 prisoners on death row nationally face execution by lethal injection.

The justices accepted the government's appeal of an appeals court roling ordering the FDA to conduct a study to assure that drugs used in executions do not cause "unusual" pain and suffering to prisoners being executed. The court will schedule arguments in the case next term, which begins in October.

The court also ruled unanimously that states may not ben fiquor advertisements from cable television programs. In another unanimous decision, the justices ruled that union pension funds can demand that companies contribute enough money to cover the eventual pensions of its employees even after the firm withdraws from the plan.

North Korea Said to Get Soviet Planes

SEOUL (UPI) - The Soviet Union upgraded its military alliance with North Korea by promising President Kim II Sung more than 20 MiG-23 jet fighters during his trip to Moscow last month, a South Korean :

government source said Monday.

The source, who declined to be identified, said North Korea had purchased 30 to 40 MiG-21s from China in 1982 but now wanted to make:

MiG-23s the mainstay of its air force.

Mr. Kim's visit upgraded the North Korean-Soviet relationship "to a new strategic level opposing military cooperation among the United States, Japan and South Korea," the source said.

Israel Bans Kahane Party From Ballot

TEL AVIV (UPI) - The Israeli central elections committee has banned Rabbi Meir Kahane's ultra-nationalist Kach party from the parliamentary elections July 23. Rabbi Kahane said Monday be would appeal the decision to the Israeli Supreme Court.

The committee, comprising representatives of Israeli political parties, voted 18-10 Sunday to bar Kach. It is the first ban of a party in 19 years. The committee and the Kach "openly supports terrorism and tries to fan haired and hostility among various segments of the population."

Bonn already had been authorized to pay a subsidy equal to 3 percent of the value of farm sales from Jan. I, 1985, to compensate for dismanting a system of border taxes and subsidies that had favored German farm exports.

Bonn had asked to advance the date to July I, 1984, and increase the payment to 5 percent. # British Auto Workers End Strike

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — A strike by 300 workers over the dismissal of a Jamaican driver, which cost BL, the state-owned auto manufacturer, £100 million ($138 million) in lost production, ended Monday as 19,000 workers returned to work.

Monay as 19,000 workers returned to work.

The strike at BL's Longbridge plant at Birmingham led to more than 18,500 layoffs at the company's six plants throughout England, which were unable to get components from Birmingham. The production of about 21,000 autos was held up during the two-week stoppage.

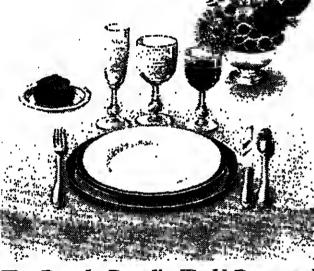

The strikers, who drive fork-lift trucks at BL, woted last Thursday to return in work Monday after the company warned of the serious long-term consequences. The driver who was dismissed, Zedelriah Mills, 50. remained out of a job. He admitted hitting a foremen, Brian Brassington, but said he reacted to a racial insult. Mr. Brassington admitted swearing but denied the insult. BL said it will not re-employ Mr. Mills, whose union said it would pursue his reinstatement in the courts.

Nicaragua, Pro and Contra

Though President Reagan would not agree, Congress would do him a service by ending his anomalous overt-covert war against Nicaragua. From its inception in 1981, this operation has affronted principle and sense. Yet for a variety of reasons, Congress has been unwilling to deny funds to anti-leftist rebels harassing a hostile Marxist regime. It is worth reviewing those reasons.

The Sandinists betrayed their promise to hold elections after taking power in 1979. They oow promise a November vote but refuse to con-cede the chief demand of their opponents: an end to emergency powers. The anti-Sandinist "contras" want genuine elections in a democratic Nicaragua and deserve U.S. heip.

There is a circular catch to this argument. As long as the rebellion continues, the Sandinists have a plausible pretext for retaining emergency powers. In any case, the contras have no practical hope of winning, short of sending in American troops to help them. In three years, they have yet to seize and hold a single town or even unite under a single command.

Nicaragua is incurably expansionist. Its leaders talk of revolution without frontiers, and they mean what they say. Witness the massive inflow of weapons and advisers from their comrades in Moscow and Havana. And this buildup started in 1979, loog before the contra rebellion.

This is a distinctly North American view of Nicaragua's menace. The countries whose security would be directly threatened show no enthusiasm for the contra effort. Even El Salvador's democratically elected president, José Napoleon Duarte, tactfully declines to endorse the not-so-secret war.

Likewise, there is a striking change of stance in Honduras, where the hard-line military chief was recently ousted. Under his command, Honduras became a staging ground for continuous U.S. maneuvers and a friendly base for the contras. The new commander, General Walter Lopez Reyes, urges a "negotiated and peaceful regional solution to the Central American conflict" and shows no inclination to behave like an American proxy.

Still, Nicaragua is supplying arms to guertilla comrades in El Salvador. Blocking this traffic is a legitimate U.S. purpose, expressly sanctioned by Congress. To cut off $21 million in emergency aid to Nicaraguan rebels would benefit Salvadoran subversives.

This argument has been challenged by David MacMichael, a former CIA analyst. He accuses the Reagan sommer CLA analyst. The accus-es the Reagan sommistration of "systematical-ly misrepresenting Nicaraguan involvement in the supply of arms to Salvadoran guerrillas to justify its efforts to overthrow the Nicaraguan government." He says the CIA is bending information to support policy and that arms interdiction was never a serious purpose of the contra effort. Mr. MacMichael is an exmarine whose contract with the CIA was not renewed in 1983. He may thus have personal reasons for asserting that there has not been a single interdiction or a verified report of arms moving from Nicaragua to El Salvador since April 1981. Nonetheless, though there have been heated denials of his charges, they have come without evidence.

Congress needs no access to classified files to see what is visible to all, that the contra operation has become an embarrassment. Its unstated purpose, to depose the Managua regime, is unattainable. Its stated purpose, to interdict a weapons flow, is justified only by assertion. On three occasions, the House has voted against spending another $21 million for this war, while the Senate has narrowly voted to give Mr. Reagan what be wants. Now the matter has come to a conference committee for resolution. Let the House speaker, Thomas P. O'Neill, hold his ground.

A Nonsecret About Taxes

The administration that invented the nonsecret secret in order to wage "covert" war in Central America wants to see if the concept will work on taxes, too. President Reagan's reelection campaign proclaims that America is feeling good again, and no one at headquarters cares to reveal a sobering truth; There has to be a tax increase next year.

It is oo secret that the Treasury is drawing up a grand design to reform the federal tax system, but since voters might perceive reform as camouflage for raising taxes, the adminis-tration insists it will be "revenue neutral." Recently, however, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said there might be two tax bills next year, the reform bill and a congressional bill to raise new revenues. That prompted the president again to disayow any need for new taxes to wipe out the deficit.

It is refreshing, therefore, to have the Brookings Institution point out that reform and higher revenues are not alternatives. They are equally urgent. Brooking's newly published "Economic Choices 1984" offers plans for "Économic Choices 1984" offers plans for economic growth. More revenue is needed if both, plus the most comprehensive plan to ever the budget deficit is to be brought under date for getting the deficit down to manageable proportions within the decade.

By 1989, its plan would cut $92 billion from projected growth of defense and condefense programs, save $88 billion in loterest annually on the debt and increase revenues by $108 billion. This would cut the 1989 deficit to $20 billion instead of the $308 billion projected. The plan judges the present tax system un-fair, inefficient and complicated. But it cor-rectly observes that reform alone will not cut the deficit. Even if designed to raise revenues, any restructuring of the system would have to phased in gradually. So, for immediate oeeds, Brookings proposes a temporary in-come tax surcharge of up to 6 percent and the removal of some deductions.

For loog-range reform, it would replace the current system of income-minus-deductions with a tax on "cash flow" — wages, interest, dividends, social security, loans, inheritance minus whatever goes into savings, investments and life insurance. The top bracket would be 39 percent. The idea deserves to be tested against the growing list of "flat" tax plans, consumption taxes and other proposals. Reform is needed for taxpayer fairness and control. An election year is exactly the time to explore such matters in public, not cover them up, as the White House wants to do.

Someone Tell the President

Reagan press conference — it happened again last Thursday night — a reporter asks a ques-tion having to do with the impact of the president's program on the less-favored of the country's citizens. The president will look uncomfortable for a moment, rather as if he were trying to arrange a particularly complicated reaction. Then he will lumber his way through a familiar set of bad statistics.

His programs, he will argue, are not unfair because, actually, they have increased benefits for the poor. "The government is providing 95 million meals a day." True, food benefits have been cut for the oot-so-poor, but "we increased the number of people that were getting food stamps because we transferred this [savingl from people who were at a higher income level." As for his tax policies, they "have been more beneficial" to people at the lower end of the earning scale "than to anyone else."

The trouble with this standard response is that it is based on numbers that are demonstrably wrong. The 95-million meal figure, for example, is pure hokum arrived at by a combination of double-counting and assuming that if government contributes a few cents toward a meal, it has bought the whole meal. The several billion dollars saved in food stamp benefits were not used to increase benefits for poor people. All recipients suffered some benefit

Sometime near the end of a typical Ronald leagan press conference—it happened again st Thursday night—a reporter asks a quesdrove more people into dire poverty.

And the roughly proportional cuts in tax rates, along with big new tax shelters and breaks on capital gains, estate and gift taxes, were worth far more to rich people than to the poor. The president is, no doubt, remembering that the share of total taxes paid by people with incomes over $50,000 increased slightly in 1982. But that was because, in that recession year, their share of total income increased relative to that of the lowest bracket groups, not because the tax cut did not favor them.

If the president thinks that lower-income people were favored by the tax cut, be should ask them whether they would rather have the $170 cut that the Congressional Budget Office estimates a lowest-bracket taxpayer will save this year, or the $22,000 that a top-bracket taxpaver will save.

The president says these things with such earnestness that he surely must believe they are true. This would imply that he would also favor policies that actually produced these results. Many people who work for the president are capable of performing the simple arithmetic that would demonstrate the facts to him. Doesn't he deserve to know?

The following version of the firing on the British steamer Woodburn is given by the St. Petersburg official agency:
"The vessel, which was steaming in the channel where the Imperial squadron was lying on account of an offence against the prescribed regulations was signalled to heave to. As the order was not obeyed the guardship first fired three blank charges and then four live shells."

BISMARCK, North Dakota - This state capital was in a turmoil [on June 18] after a day of tenseness which saw federal troops come and go, and during which Governor William Langer, under conviction of conspiracy, resorted to armed force to prevent Lieutenant-Governor Ole Olson from taking over the reins of the state government. Governor Langer, found guilty [on June 17] by a jury, after two days' deliberation, of forcing state employees to contribute to political campaigns, was granted a postponement in passage of sentence, and immediately announced he would fight to retain his office. Lieutenant-Governor Olson took the oath of office as governor but was unable to enter the executive offices.

Does the administration not see that it would be more practical to negotiate now about concrete security problems, such as an end to cross-border subversion, and leave aside larger "internal" problems, such as the evolution of democracy, until they can be pursued by more appropriate strategies? # A Scenario Favoring the Underdog

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON - When "everyone" agrees on something it is frequently wise to listen to someone who dissents. The conventional wisdom has been proved wrong so often io this political year that there is certainly a chance that it will be wrong again.

That is why I went back to talk with Richard Leone about Walter Mondale's chances of beating President Reagan. "Everyone" says these prospects are uil. This column has dwelt on the weaknesses the prima-ries revealed in Mr. Mondale and the difficulties he faces in trying to unseat the incumbent.

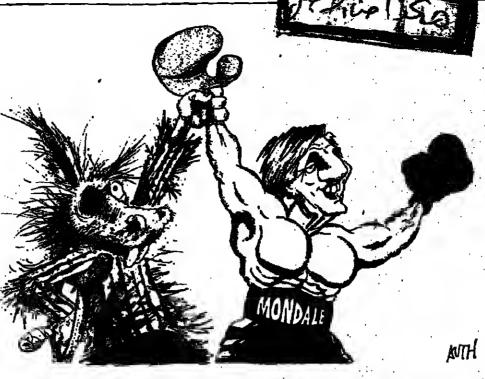

As an antidote to that orthodoxy, I offer the view of Mr. Leone, a veteran of New Jersey politics and the self-described "house optimist" of the Mondale campaign in the Northeast, Mr. Leone established his credentials with me in mid-May, when "everyone" said Mr. Mondale faced a tough fight to win the New Jersey primary.

1 bumped into Mr. Leone at the Mondale state headquarters in Liv-ingston, New Jersey, where he was virtually the only person talking about the possibility of a big win. When Mr. Mondale blitzed the opposition, winning 99 delegates to 8 for Jesse Jackson and oone for Gary Hart, I decided to reread the notes of my interview with Mr. Leone.

What he had said was this: "When Walter Mondale is in a state where he must concentrate on expanding his base, he does well. When he is in a state where the campaign is designed to preserve his base, he does not.

"In states like New Hampshire and Ohio, be let himself be stereotyped as the candidate of this group or that group. He became the typi-cal Old Politics figure. But in states like Illinois and New York, where he recognized he had to go beyond his base to win, be has done well. "New Jersey," Mr. Leone said "is that kind of state. It is up-scale and independent. And Mondale is going after those voters." He won their support in New Jersey, while failing the same day in California, where his campaign was aimed at preserving his base among the elderly, the Hispanics, the Jews and members of organized labor. In New Jersey, by contrast, Mr. Mondale beat Mr. Hart among selfdescribed independents, among the 70 percent who said they had oot been hurt by Mr. Reagan's economie policies, among the self-employed and the salaried workers, in nonunioo households, and among those with the highest levels of education and income, according to exit polls. He won these groups in New Jer-sey (he had lost their counterparts in other states) by emphasizing is-sues such as arms control, the environment and economic growth. The payoff was that Mr. Mon-dale, for the first time outside the South, was rated as being superior to Mr. Hart as a strong leader. What are the implications for the general election? Mr. Leone draws rwo lessons. "People expect Ronald Reagan to be dazzling." be said in a post-primary interview, "and they expect Mondale to be unexciting. So when he [Mondale] starts campaigning hard, they will be sur-prised. They will be surprised how well he will do in debates."

If this "expectations" argument is traditional from the camp of the underdog, the second point Mr. Leone made was more subtle. "Mondale needs to play off someone, to draw the differences," be said.

"It is not the differences themresident, but the content of the con learn is that he is very good on the [nuclear] freeze issue, on the envi-ronment, on women's issues, and the other issues of concern to them. They start to take another look."

Then Mr. Leone said something surprising. "I've always thought the primaries would be a lot tougher for londate than the general election." Why? "Because the job of drawing the differences with the other. Democrats was bound to be more. difficult than it will be with Reagan. The greater the differences, the more people will learn about Mon-dele's positions; and the more they learn, the better his chances of ex-panding his base. If he can secure his base by running the right kind of convention and frame the issues with Reagan correctly, then he can win the election — no question." But Mr. Mondale's "house optimist" lists two potential hardies: the candidate must succeed in creating order and unity out of the po-tential chaos at the convention next month in San Francisco, and be must then wrest from Mr. Reagan and the White House the initiative in "framing the debate."

At the risk of being unconventional, let me say that if Mr. Mondale and the Democrats manage to do both those things, then the aunum may well bring as close a cam-paign as Mr. Leone suggests.

Just What Is the Threat From Nicaragua?

WASHINGTON — Did Secre-tary of State George P. Shultz's visit to Managua mean that the Rea-gan administration has changed course in Central America? Or was it only a tactical blip in a continuing confrontation? In fact, the visit prob-ably signified much less than many observers would like to think. The administration is still not sure whether containment or elimination is the best, and most feasible, way to deal with the Sandinist regime.

Over the past three years, the administration's geostrategic concerns have shifted from El Salvador to Nicaragua - to the alleged source of Communist infection. Yet even the administration has never been entirely sure about the nature of the securithreat posed by the Sandinists. There is virtual unanimity that Soviet or Cuban military bases or combat presence in Central America would be an intolerable threat. But would that be the only intolerable threat?

The predominant official view has been that not only military bases but even cooventional relations between the Sandinists and the Soviet Union and Cuba would be threatening, because such ties might lead to intelligence sharing or facilitate future Soviet aggression. Other officials argue that the real threat is the revolutionary ethos of the Sandinists, which requires them to export revolution. This uncertainty about the nature of the threat gives rise to a host of other questions, also unresolved. Is the survival of the Sandinist regime compatible with peace and stability in Central America? Are there any circumstances under which the United States would be prepared to coexist with the Sandinists? Can Washington and Managua reach accord on specific security points, such as cut-ting off aid to the Salvadoran rebels, and what price would the United States pay for that? Or must the Sandinist regime change its nature before

Americans will deal with it? The Resean administration has tended to weave between two poles. One is its profound distrust of the Sandinists and its conviction that any settlement that permits them to re-main in power would perpetuate a ban foothold on the isthmus. The logical implication is that they have to go. The problem - and the other pole - is that the political and military costs of exorcising them by force may be too high for even this

What about the alternative - a political solution"? Here, the debate really begins. What constitutes "negotiation"? And what really are the U.S. demands? The administration insists that the Sandinists would have to agree not only to stop exporting revolution but also to change the na-ture of their regime and "sanitize" their relations with Moscow and Havana. This insistence on simultaneous changes in Nicaragua's foreign and domestic policies makes the U.S.

Some in the administration may once have hoped to use these counterrevolutionary fighters to overthrow the Sandinist government, but they bave been restrained by the difficulty of achieving that outcome without much deeper American involvement. Union is willing to help them.
What about the Shultz visit? It does not indicate that the administration has made up its mind about any of these things; after all, the secretary repeated his support for the contrast even as he left Managua. # Latin Debtors Come Together, Divided

R IO DE JANEIRO — If the debt-or countries of Latin America were as united on what to do about their common problem as foreign bankers are on collecting their money, the meeting this week of Latin American finance and foreign minis-ters, in Cartagena, Colombia, would have the makings of a showdown.

But the Latin American governments are politically divided, uncertain about one another's intentions and weakened by financial anemia and social upheaval. There is an absence of strong regional leadership and of resolve for collective action. Anxieties over the crushing burden of the region's foreign debt of $330 billion, and the alarming decline in regional economic growth since 1982, produced the cry for help contained in the letter sent to the economic presidents of Argentina, Brazil, Coombia and Mexico. What the Latin Americans got in reply was a stiff-arm. Led by President Ronald Reagan, the big creditor governments rejected a "scheme of shared responsibility" for easing the debt burden. The Latin Americans were told to work out their problems case by case with the international banks that hold 80 percent of the debt and which collect interest at an summit conference in London by the annual rate of $40 billion. This is the heart of the problem. The United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America calculates that the countries of the region, all hungry for capital to promote economic and social development, paid $2! billion more for debt service last year than they received in loans and investments from outside the region. In the words of Sergio Correa da Costa. Brazil's ambassador to the United States, this treatment of the debt problem is like "a blood transfusion from the patient to the doctor." But in the absence of a positive response to their appeal for cooperation from the creditor governments on a comprehensive debt restructuring, the Latin American governments face a dilemma that divides them. Do they stay within the rules for international finance set by the banks and the International Monetary Fund, getting the best deal each can negotiate separately, or do they collectively tell the banks "enough," and set out Lann American terms for debt repayment, limiting the level of interest rates and the amount they will pay annually in debt service?

Of the nine countries that bave agreed to send ministerial delegations to Cartagena, only Argentina seems to be prepared to push for a "politi-cal" challenge to the present foreign bank-IMF system. The new Argentine democracy under President Rapi Alfonsin will austerity formulas that lead to reprice for obtaining debt refinancing. This is a price Mr. Alfonsin has said he will not pay. Although Argentina is wracked by 500-percent inflation, be says he wants to increase real wages and promises a revival of economie growth. Argentina has paid virtually nothing since December on its $43-billion foreign debt. Bolivia can be considered an ally of

This treatment of the debt problem is like a transfusion from the patient to the doctor.

Argentina in the "revisionist" position. It has already declared a fouryear moratorium on its $4-billion foreign debt, on which payments have been suspended since last year. But Bolivia, which has the weakest economy in South America, is not considered an economic example to he followed by the other participants. The other big debtors — Brazil, which owes nearly $100 billion; Mexico, $90 billion; Venezuela, $35 billion, and Chile, $21 billion -- are all working with their major creditor banks in an effort to find solutions to their debt problems.

a, under its recently elected president. Jaime Lusinchi, is as much a democracy as Argentina. With international reserves of more than $10 billion and an export economy based on oil, the Venezuelans have steered clear of a formal agreement with the IMF, but the Lusinchi government has refused to line up with Argentina in a confrontation with the banks.

Mexico, which touched off the Latin American debt crisis in 1982 when duced wages and consumption as the officials in Mexico City decided to suspend debt payments, is busily working out improved terms for refi-nancing its debt, with the help of a $12-billion trade surplus that covers interest payments. The country that holds the balance in the Latin American debt strategy is Brazil, which has the largest economy and is the largest debtor. Under the economic leadership of Antonio Delfim Netto, the planning minister, Brazil rejects a confrontational approach to the banks. Although it has to pay up to $12 billion in interest this year under the present debt. scheme, exports are booming and officials foresce a trade surplus of close to $12 billion this year.

"All that we have to do is keep negotiating for better terms; as long as we keep our interest payments going we will stay alive," said Mr. Delfim Netto. He sees exports rising to an annual level of $40 billion by 1987.

What all these nations can agree on is that international interest rates have to come down and protectionism in the markets of the industrial countries has to be fought in forums such as the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the U.S. Congress and the European Community. The most that can be expected to come out of Cartagena is a renewed appeal for an international trade conference that would take into account the need of developing countries to expand their exports to pay off debts, and warnings to the Reagan administration on U.S. budget deficits that contribute to high interest rates. The realists in the region do not want to issuach a financial Falkland Islands war that they lack the unity and strength to win.

In Europe, The Public Just Shrugs

By Flora Lewis

DARIS - The irony of the just-I ended elections to the European Parliament is that they have been turned into a cost-free protest against national governments.

The first direct vote for the European Community's weightless deliberative body was in 1979. Before that, members were designated by national legislatures. Reform was urged by eager pro-Europeans to revive popular interest in the Community, perceived as a distant hympatyracy withceived as a distant bureaucracy without grass-roots links.
The argument was that a special election campaign would give citizens of the European Community a sense of direct responsibility for the development of their joint enterprise and spark a new momentum for European unity. It didn't work.

In their first term, the parliamentarians talked up a storm, but nobody fistened. Since they cannot legislate, and have seldom dared to use their conductions of the conduction. power, the widespread conclusion was that they simply did not matter. If the idea of a united Europe was still as exciting and mobilizing a goal as it was in the 1960s, the conclusion might be that the Parliament should be strengthened, endowed with more practical power. But instead of broadening voters' ontlook to com-mon problems beyond their country's borders, the campaign was a sorry demonstration of how much their concerns have shrunk. All emphasis was on national poli-tics, with no really European issues offered in search of a new mandate. Since national governments were not directly affected, however, voters had a chance to vent their spleen without risk of shifting power. The effort to promote responsibility provided instead an irresponsible anti-popularity contest, which weighs on politicians but does not force them ont.

Participation was far below normal everywhere, only 30 percent in Brit-ain. Almost all governments were sharply rebuffed, and opposition par-ties gained whether they were on the left or on the right.

Anti-Enropeans did well, especially in Britain and Denmark. In England, Labor nearly doubled its number of seats, although an important by-election in Portsmouth during the European election trounced Labor, ousted Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Tories, and gave victory to the Liberal-Social Democratic alti-ance. The single by-election was doubless a more significant mark of British trends than results of the feeble turnout for European elections. In France, the extreme right made an unusual showing of more than 10 percent, almost even with the Communists; who dropped to a record low of 11.2 percent. Voters who dislike ernment and the major opposition could show thumbs down this way, without feeling they had given ex-tremists a bandle on power.

In West Germany, the leftist Greens sank the Liberal coalition partners in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government in the same sort of reaction. In Italy, the Communists may have ourscored the Christian Democrats for the first time, as a esture of public sympathy after the death of the Communist leader Enrico Berlinguer. In Greece, the elections generated excitement, even disorder, but not about Europe. The point was how vociferously the opposition wanted to put down Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's Socialists. Everywhere else, the campaign was a dud.

It all adds up to concrete evidence supporting the many less tangible signs that Europe has run out of steam. Leaders may intone solemn appeals and propose grand schemes to revive cooperation. The public shrugs. The European ideal has deteniorated in its consciousness to the wine lake, the butter mountain and the sea of milk that drain its re-sources, and the budget bicketing that divides its governments.

This is a sad fact three years before the Community reaches age 30, early for dotage. Indeed, it is still far from mature in the sense of becoming even a true common market without national barriers to trade and finance, let alone moving on toward the Unit-ed States of Europe once envisioned.

The decadence is not necessarily seeminal. The Community is not going to fall apart soon, though it is hard to see any spring of rejuvenation on the horizon. Not one of today's leaders is able to speak to or for more than his own country. Everyone has imped inward. The loss is America's as well as Europe's. It means there is no second pillar for the trans-Atlantic partnership that President Kennedy described. It increases the burden of American leadership to maintain the unity of democracies, on which the future depends. Europe's paralysis may tempt Washington to go it alone, but it should not. It adds to America's responsibility. The New York Tomes.

A Model Third World Nation Committed to Democracy, Development and Non-Alignment

PRESIDENT JAYEWARDENE of Sri Lanka meets Mr. Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America this week. This is a memorable event, the climax of a State visit at the invitation of the White House, and an occasion for the reinvigoration of ties by both nations.

Over the years, Sri Lanka has figured in the American imagination as a beautiful, exotic island jewel in the Indian Ocean, enriched by several religions and multiple cultures and with a rich tradition rolling back into the distant past. Both countries share an unshakable belief in individual rights and liberties, and in the democratic political system as the basis for promoting both political stability and economic progress in the Third World. Sri Lanka is among the few nations which owes its present vigour and outlook to the sturdy growth and consolidation of its parlimentary institutions.

Thirty-five years after independence, Sri Lanka stands committed to a free and just society, seeking the prosperity of its people through a new set of open economic policies appropriate to the philosophy of an open society and its fundamental rights. This provides a context in which an American-Sri Lankan dialogue acquires a more than usual relevance and an enhanced capacity for mutual understanding.

Basic Indicators

The substantive progress it has achieved so far can, for example, be gathered from a reference to the three basic social indicators of life expectancy, infant mortality and literacy which together add up to an index to the physical quality of life in a third world country as well as in the rest of the world.

On this reckoning the United States with a per capita income of US $ 13,000 achieves a placement in the upper 90s on a scale of 0 to 100, the Republic of Korea 82 with a per capita income of a little under US $ 2,000 and Singapore 86 with a per capita income of approximately US $ 5,000. Sri Lanka is 83 with an income of no more than US $ 300, thereby establishing an unusual nexus between the qualitative and quantitative aspects of life and development. In the pursuit of defined economic goals, Sri Lanka has always been guided by the need to develop the individual's potential as a human being within the framework of democratic liberties and rights.

President Jayewardene and the First Lan

This balance between physical and human needs is what democracy and the parliamentary system in Sri Lanka have been designed to promote and preserve. Sri Lanka was the first among the third world countries to introduce universal adult franchise and establish in the mid-forties the basis for a welfare society by introducing free education, free health service and a system of consumer subsidies. Under President Jayewardene's leadership these have been harnessed to and reconciled with the pragmatism of a dynamic economy

National Objectives

In the pursuit of national objectives Sri Lanka recognises two imperative conditions. First, the vital importance of world peace. Second, the equal importance of securing the co-operation of all nations in the global cause of economic emancipation. These certainly are among the basic convictions with which President Jayewardene is seeking, with the US President, to initiate a new contemporary dialogue with the United States.

Sri Lanka is a founder member and the first

Asian Chairman of the nonaligned movement. It initiated the proposal for the Indian Ocean to be a Zone of Peace.

It has striven for South Asian co-operation and harmonious multi-lateral relations in which regional tensions and rivalries can be speedily resolved. At the United Nations and other international fora it has tried to strengthen and give relevance to the voice of moderation and reason. Together these add up to a policy that reflects the conviction that all countries, large or small, whatever their system or ideology, have the right and obligation to co-operate in the promotion and preservation of peace.

As a developing nation, Sri Lanka has not been without growing pains some of which derive from its characters as a multi-racial and multi-religious society. In language, fundamental liberties and participation in development, all communities have and enjoy guaranteed rights under the Constitution.

Although last year's unfortunate out-break of ethnic violence was not without provocation, it can be thought of only as an aberration from the high level of communal harmony that has already been achieved and maintained through th centuries. Leaders of the various communities and religions have been brought together at the personal initiative of President Jayewardene at a round table conference which is moving toward a solution of outstanding issues.

Economic Progress

At the same time it is President Jayewardene's belief that it is only by accelerating economic development that Sri Lanka can overcome the challenges that a multi-racial and multi-religious society throws up from time to time. This provides the rationale for the new direction in Sri Lanka's economic policies initiated by President Jayewardene. The liberalisation of Sri Lanka's economy at the very commencement of President Jayewardene's administration by doing away with the controls and restrictions, is the major factor in the process of economic re-vitalisation Sri Lanka is now undergoing.

Another is the deliberate and considered improvement of investment conditions for the benefit of both the Sri Lankan and the foreign investor that has become a noteworthy feature of the present Sri Lanka scene. These include substantial investment incentives and a framework of bilateral Investment Protection Agreements with a number of countries reinforced by a constitutional guarantee affording the fullest protection to the investor. It is this new and evolving Sri Lanka, belonging to the eighties and moving to the future which its President introduces to the United States, in a spirit of reciprocated goodwill and understanding.

Popular Welfare

President Jayewardene stands committed to making Sri Lanka a Third World model based upon democratic institutions, popular welfare and the dynamic elements of free enterprise. His State visit takes place in his second term in office in which he has five years more to guide Sri Lanka.

We wish him, in his capacity as Sri Lanka's leader and as his country's elder statesman, every success in his endeavours to build a free and just society — a mandate given to him at two successive elections by the overwhelming majority of the Sri Lanka people.

According to Scotland Yard sta-

Police statistics show a large increase in the number of crimes in which guns have been threatened or used, from 1,401 cases in 1976 to 1,935 cases last year. In 1976 policemen drew their

"Parallel to this," says Brodowski, "the idea for a European Jazz Federation began to grow. In 1967, a resolution founding the EJF was signed in Warsaw by leading figures from Anstria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Fin-land, France, Great Britain, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Romania, Sweden, the USSR and West Germany. fairy tale about werewolves.

The forests are littered with the carcasses of directors who wanted to make artistic films about men who turn into wolves. Yet Jordan was able to get $3 million from ITC, the British entertainment conglomerate, to make the company's first production since Lord Grade's departure several years ago.

Based on a short story by the fantasy writer Angela Carter, "The Company of Wolves" is one movie about unnatural transformations that isn't pitched at a mass audithat isn't pitched at a mass and ence. # FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Economic Uncertainty Fuels Strikes Will VALUE Futures-Trading Activity

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

New York Times Service EW YORK - Anyone who wants to know which areas of the economy are of prime concern to those in business needs only to look at the futures-trading volume, because uncertainty is what lures both hedgers and speculators into these markets.

Last month, for example, everyone was preoccupied with the trend in interest rates. This was reflected in the record volume of trading in Treasury-bond futures, nearly 3.4 million contracts, double the May 1983 total. No other futures market was as active in May. For the same reason, trading in Eurodollar futures climbed to 435,000 contracts in May, from 56,268 a year earlier. The second most active futures market was in soybeans, with

1.5 million contracts, compared with $51,000 in May 1983. There is concern that this year's crop may barely cover domestic and export demand for the commodity, which is used to make Futures trading many edible and industrial

Uncertainties over the outlook for stock prices and the value of the dollar were also reflected by the active trading n the index and foreign-exchange futures market. Futures trading in the Standard & Poor's 500 index, against which professional portfolio managers are judged, jumped to more than a million contracts last month, from 715,000 in May 1983.

soared 32 percent

earlier.

The futures volume for the Deutsche mark soared to 449,000. from 192,000, because the dollar's strength is commonly measured against the currency. But trading in Japanese-yen futures slumped to 221,000, from 396,000 contracts, because traders saw little change in the currency, despite Washington's efforts to persuade Japan to make the yen more of an international mone-

Over all, the Futures Industry Association reported that futures trading soared 32 percent from a year earlier, to 15 million contracts in May. The total for the first five months increased 16 percent from a year earlier, to 64.3 million.

Even more impressive was the trading of options based on futures. In May, the total was bearly I.1 million, up from 198,463 a year earlier. For the year through May, options volume exploded to 3.6 million contracts, from 788,000.

Here again, the trading leader was Treasury bonds, with a total of 785,000, compared with 121,454 in May 1983. For the first five months, 2.5 million T-bond options changed bands, up from 419,837 in the 1983 period.

But the continuing rise in options on futures did not cause much joy for most traders. That is because the changing nature of the futures business, from what was basically a farm and industrial raw-materials market to a financial instrument market, has caused many problems.

"Most individual futures traders, as well as the professionals, have often found themselves confused by the newer markets, said Morton S. Baratz, editor of Managed Accounts Reports, Columbia, Maryland, "and their education in the financial and stock index markets has been expensive for most of them."

Mr. Baratz explained that the financial and index markets M perplex the traders (and many hedgers) who follow the fundamentals of supply and demand, as well as the "technicians" and "chartists" who rely on computer-programmed trading strategies.

"I know several futures fund managers with excellent track records who won't touch the financial and index markets until enough time has clapsed for the oew markets to establish histories that can then be programmed on their computers," he said. Until such time, they said they would consider such markets as

seeing patterns develop in the oew markets that can be exploited profitably by panent futures traders who abandon their usual inand-out trading practices in favor of longer holding periods, Mr.

Jay Klopfenstein, president of Norwood Securities Inc., a Chicago brokerage house that does not handle futures business, has also found that patient fund managers have improved their performance.

BASEL, Switzerland - Central bankers at the annual meeting of the Bank for International Settlements said Monday that early agreement in the dispute between Argentina and the International Monerary Fund is being ruled out by more and more central bankers. Some see the problem dragging on for months:

Bankers said they had been told by the Argentine central bank's ernor, Enrique Garcia Vazquez, that his government wanted to agree on an economic program with the IMF as soon as possible.

Current Account In U.S. Reaches Record Deficit

By Jane Seaberry

ingion Post Service WASHINGTON - The U.S. current account deficit reached a record $19.4 billion during the first quarter, as the balance on merchandise trade continued to deteriorate at a record rate, the Commerce Department reported Monday. The current account is a tal goods and agricultural combroad measure that includes trade in merchandise and services.

"While the services surplus should rise this year, the deterioration in the trade deficit, evident in the second quarter, means proba-hle further increases in the current account shortfall," said Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige Monday. Services and merchandise trade have been hurt by the strong value of the dollar, which makes imports relatively cheaper than U.S. goods and makes exports less competitive with goods abroad, economists have said. In addition, the U.S. economic recovery has provided more jobs and incomes for Americans to huy imports.

However, the recovery in many other countries has not picked up enough for foreigners to huy large amounts of U.S.-made goods.

economists said. At an annual rate, the nation's current account deficit was $77.6 billion, almost double last year's $41.6-billion deficit, the Commerce Department reported. The current account deficit for 1982 was $9.2

billion, compared with a $6.3-bil-lion surplus in 1981. The deficit was $17.2 billion during the fourth quarter last year, the previous quarterly record.

Nonpetroleum imports rose $8.6 billion, which more than offset a small decline in oil imports and a modest increase in exports, the Commerce Department reported.

Net receipts for services in-creased $3.1 billion to $8.4 hillion. The increase in services receipts was due largely to an increase in income on U.S. direct investment abroad, which reflected a pickup in economic activity overseas and a shift to small capital gains from large capital losses in the fourth quarter, Commerce said.

Income from services is being undermined by higher interest and dividend liabilities held by foreigners, said Sara Johnson, senior economist for Data Resources Inc. The current account deficit must be financed by a net inflow of capital into the United States, which gen-erates interest and dividend income for foreigners.

During the first quarter, the mer-chandise trade deficit swelled to

A message to our readers from Lee W. Huebner, Publisher.

The International Herald Tribune is unique in being a worldwide newspaper, with more than 153,000 copies sold each day in 164 countries. But this international distribution also presents us with a unique problem: how can we learn about our readers, their interests and characteristics?

We need to know about you. Whether you are a regular reader or someone who is seeing the paper for the first time—whether you are traveling or at home—whether you are reading in an office or a cafe or an airplane—we very much need your help, right now, in order to give an accurate picture to our editors and to advertisers.

Won't you please take a few minutes to complete this confidential Won't you please take a few minutes to complete this confidential questionnaire and return it to Research Services Limited, the independent, London-based organization which conducts the survey for us? If you are rushed, won't you at least pull out this page and save it until a moment is You can return the questionnaire either using the folding instructions on the reverse or your own envelope. As a gesture of our appreciation we will make a charitable donation of one U.S. dollar for each participant. The results of the survey and the total contributed to each charity will be published in September. This audience research is extremely important to us—and we earnestly hope for your cooperation. Bank and Treasury officials met Sunday to consider the government's options for propping up the value of the dollar.

A Reserve Bank spokesman said Monday that the institution had advised foreign-exchange dealers hat the Reserve Bank would buy dollars in the event of devaluation. Sir Robert blamed the Labor Party for the rush on funds,

"The moment you go into an election and somebody says 'Oh yosh, they might win and there will be a devaluation,' that is what is langerous about such talk, and it hows the basic inexperience of the abor Party people," he said.

Bache Is Buying Australian Stake

MELBOURNE - Prudential-Bache Securities will soon acquire a 7.9 percent stake in a Melhourne stockbrokerage, Cortis & Carr, in the first joint venture between U.S. and Aus-tralian securities firms, Cortis & Carr said Monday.

The new firm will be known as Bache Cortis & Carr, and the Prudential-Bache stake is the maximum permitted under U.S. insurance law.

Australian foreign investment rules allow a maximum of 15 percent for a single foreign stake in a stockbrokererage.

But this new era is raising some problems for businesses, utilities and regulators.

Companies like Dow are attracted by the savings inherent in generating their own power, but at the same time they are often hesitant to become involved in an unfamiliar enterprise. Some utilities are fighting cogeneration because of the un-derstandable loss of customers and revenue, and the fear that a few of the new cogenerators might some-day turn out enough extra power in compete as utilities themselves. But other utilities see cogeneration as a wonderful way to acquire additional power without the huge cost of building a new power plant, particularly in this age of alarmingly costly nuclear plants.

Evidence of the cogeneration boom is apparent in many seg-ments of the nation's power sys-tem. In 1982, even before the Sugeneration capacity while utilities canceled or deferred construction of power plants that would generate 26 million kilowatts of electricity, the Energy Department said.

In the five months after the court decision in May of 1983, so much cogeneration equipment was ordered that the nation's cogeneration capacity grew by 25 per cent, a rate unprecedented in power-in-dustry history, according to John N. Enstis, who heads the Energy Department's cogeneration office.

The move in cogeneration has been outstanding even astounding," said Thomas S. DePre, a vice president at Becker Parabas Inc., a New York lovestment banking firm that is rushing to underwrite oew ventures. "Every industry that's a major energy user is looking at it."

Numerous companies are making plans to manufacture cogeneration units, seeking a share of the

Reuters HAVANA - The Cuban military commander on Grenada dur-ing the U.S.-led invasion in Octo-ber, Colonel Pedro Tortolo, has been demoted to private and sent to Angola because of his poor performance, informed Cuban sources said Monday.

"The punishment is the equiva-lent of being sent to the Russian front during World War II," said one Cuban with close ties to the military.

The sources said that other Cuban officers received similar sentences but they said they could give no details. Twenty-four Cubans, all civilians, were killed during the invasion after a leftist coup in which Prime Minister Maurice Bishop, an ally of Fidel Castro's government, was overthrown and murdered.

Most of the Cubans on the island at the time of the iovasion were captured and deported arriving home to a hero's welcome, and Co onel Tortolo initially enjoyed the same treatment. But questions arose over how he and other millitary men managed to escape un scathed to the safety of the Source entitions were killed in the fishing

THE UNNATURAL ALLIANCE

Reviewed by Dennis Herbstein

SOUTH AFRICAN Prime Minister P. W. Botha's visit to the graves of his fellow countrymen buried in war cemeteries in France smacked of political opportunism at its most blatant. For during that war in which so many South Africans died, Mr. Botha was a paid organizer for the opposition National Party, which hoped fervenly that Nazi Germany would give the British a good thrashing. Over the years Mr. Botha has come to terms with his disappointment, though apartheid has now re-placed Hitlerism as the world's worst case of race prejudice. And, more to the point, the war's most grateful survivors, the Israelis, have become military allies of South Africa.

James Adams's book details the extraordinary alliance between these two outcast states. Nobody loved them, so they turned to each other. It should be said that South Africa is the greater parish and its need for friendship more acute. The Jewish state at least gave the vote to all its people, Moslems included. But since the 1967 Six Day War and the acquisition of large numbers of unwilling subjects in the con-quered territories, Israel's treatment of its Arabs has come more and more to resemble the heavy-handed style of Mr. Botha.

The friendship began long before the state of Israel existed. South Africa's Jews are as influential as their American co-religionists. They held ministerial office under the wartime prime minister (and great friend of Zionism) Ian Smuts, they own large chunks of mining, man-ufacturing industry and commerce—many of Cape Town's 100,000 Moslems work in Jewishowned clothing factories - and are proc in university teaching, the learned professions, arts, literature (Nadine Gordiner).

But since the Afrikaner nationalists came to power in 1948, tens of thousands of Jews, nneasy about the future, have settled in Israel as well as Britain, Australia, North America. Some of those who stayed have bravely resisted some of those who stayed have bravely resisted the encroachments on the rule of law, occasionally going to prison for their views. Others have collaborated, joined the National Party, which once blackballed Jews, become entered in the arms industry and the hardware of racial oppression. The Jewish Board of Deputies, official voice of South African Jewsy, which commented the ties here. was the catalyst which comented the ties between the two countries.

It was, though, uncertainty about Americanidiplomacy which accelerated the process. Israports on South Africa. He wrote this review for el has no illusions that Washington's need to the International Herald Tribiane.

cultivate friendly Arab Gulf states might one day lead to a cooler atmosphere between the two countries. And the South Africans felt let down by Henry Kissinger when the secretary of state withdrew moral and military support at a crucial moment in the Angolin war.

As James Adams says, their defence needs are almost identical. There is now cooperation in the manufacture of a new generation of tanks, a revolutionary fighter asseraft, naval vessels and submarines, as well as artillery and small arms. South African sailors and pilots train in Israel, while some 25,000 Israelis live in the Republic these days, advising on anti-guerilla warfare on the Namibian-Angolan border, making the most of tax holidays in the Bantustans that few other countries will touch and helping out on ancient technology.

It must be said that the mandatory United Nations embargo against supplying weapons to South Africa is more honored in the breach by the West. Even the Bulgarians are numored to have run arms to the despised Boers. Israel is rather more blatant about it, has become a staging post between American dealers and Pretoria.

Both the CIA and French intelligence, Ad-ams claims, believe that Israel has acquired a basket-full of nuclear devices in the wake of the 1973 Yom Kippur War. That know-how, com-bined with South Africa's raw materials and large empty spaces on land and sea for noisy experiments, is the most frightening aspect of this alliance of committees which have not even signed the non-proliferation agreement. There is still doubt as to whether the flash of light in the southern Indian Ocean one day in September 1979 was a muclear explosion or not. An official United States inquiry said it wasn't, but Adams claims to have been told by "very senior members of Israel's intelligence commu nity" that it was a South African device, aided and abented by Israeli personnel and technol-

And it all comes down to having to spend money they can ill afford in order to resist the demands of blacks/Palestinians to a place in the life of each country. However, since South Africa softened up her radical neighbours, encouraging them to sign non-aggression pacts, there is less need for so powerful a weapon. Israel's nuclear capability, on the other hand, is rather more ominous.

Norman birdied the 14th hole and then scrambled for par on the four finishing holes to finish at 69 for the day. Zoeller, who birdied four holes in a row on the front nine, shot par 70.

They were the only golfers to 17th too far, landing it in rough play the 72 holes below par, Curtis next to a big tree. But he managed Strange ended up in third place to punch the ball out and advance with a 1-over-par 281.

Hale Irwin, who led by a shot after the second and third rounds, saw his game collapse and fell to a final round of 79 and finished 4 over par for 284. Irwin has won two Opens, here at Winged Foot in 1974 and in 1979 at Inverness in Toledo, Ohio.

This will be the first playoff for an Open championship since 1975, when Lou Graham beat John Mahaffey by two shots at Medinah in

When Zoeller drove into the deep right bunker at No. 10 and took a bogey 4 there, his lead was cui to two shots. After Norman had a bogey 6 at the 12th hole, the lead was back to three. But then Norman moved to within a shot at the 14th hole when he birdied the par-4 hole and Zoeller bogeyed.

After each had par 4s at No. 14 and No. 15, they were set for the long walk back to the clubhouse over three of the most difficult fin- green ishing holes in Open competition. Each of the holes is a long par 4 - grass adjacent to the bleachers and game."

OUAGADOUGOU, Upper Volta (Reuters) — Africa's main sports body has called on its member countries to boycott sports events in Britain following England's rugby union tour of South Africa this month.

A resolution, adopted Sunday night at the end of a two-day meeting there of the Supreme Council for Sport in Africa, implied that Africa would not boycott major competitions involving Britain but staged outside of Britain or Africa, such as the Los Angeles Olympics.

European Soccer Is Still Wide Open

PARIS (AP) — With one round of group matches remaining only France has qualified for the semifinals of the 1984 European soccer championship. Six teams are battling for the remaining three places. In Group One on Tuesday, Belgium plays Denmark in Strasbourg to letermine which country will join France in the next round. The Danes need only a draw to advance. Yugoslavia, the only team eliminated, will neet France in St. Etienne.

Any two of the four teams in Group Two can make the seimifinals.

West Germany, the defending champion, faces Spain in Paris on Wednes-lay and needs only a draw to advance. Romania has to beat Portugal in Nantes the same day to keep its hopes of qualifying alive.

Jaguar Hopes to Return to Le Mans LE MANS, France (Reuters) - The Group 44 team of the United States has said that its intends to bring its Jaguars back to the Le Mans 24-hour race next year if a dispute over fuel allowance rules can be resolved. The two Jaguar entries retired from last weekend's race due to mechanical problems, but one car had climbed as high as fifth place. "We have learned a lot from this trip to Le Mans," John Baker, a team official said. "We are glad that the cars are competitive and look forward

":o another venture here if the rules matter can be satisfactorily resolved."

Athol Fugard Film Traces Dark Parallel

By Samuel G. Freedman New York Times Service

TEW YORK - The withered and I mean man who appears at a Boer farmstead in "The Guest" is the South African author Eugene Marais. He is also Athol Fugard. Marais is a historical figure. the character, and Fugard is the actor and writer who has brought him to celluloid life. Yet the connection between the two men is even more infomate. For in "The Guest" — the first of two films by Fugard, best-known as a dramatist, being shown here at the Film Forum - the lines virtually vanish between performance and autobiography, imagination and self-revelation.

The real Marais was a poet and a naturalist, who influenced Fugard in both areas. He was a newspaper editor who exposed political corruption in his government, just as Fugard has dramatized the moral corrosion of his country in such plays as "The Blood Knot" and "Master Harold"... and the boys." And Marais was a drug addict. There, too, is a parallel, because Athol Fugard is an alcoholic. The only difference is that Fugard stopped drinking 17 months ago; Marais, never able or willing to stop using morphine, shot himself to death in 1936 while going through withdrawal. That exception aside, in playing Marais, Fugard is playing Fugard — something be realizes even more in retrospect than when be wrote and acted in the film in 1976.

"That is absolutely one of the things that fascinated me, and still fascinates me, about Marais," Fugard said in a recent conversation in New York. This man's poetry, his incredible work as a naturalist -and then this dark side, this dark parallel to me. There is this addictive nature in my personality. I'm not known for my selfcontrol; I have virtually none. I've never got to the point of sticking a needle to my arm, but I did reach the point where f had to stand up at an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting in New York and say, 'My name is Athol Fugard and I am an alcoholic."

"At no point in my life were there ever a set of circumstances where I had to plead and beg for my fix, as Marais did. But there were occasions when I desperately wanted alcohol and 1 didn't have it. I think 1 had enough going oo in my personal life that I had some intuitive sense of what Marais was going through. In playing the part, I processed myself. I can only describe it as if I once had a very strange dream about being Eugene Marais. It was very difficult. I had to spiral away, hide behind myself, While making that film, I could hardly deal with people. I was like Marais."

Marais (1871-1936) began using morphine to ease his migraine headaches in the 1890s, and he remained addicted for oearly 45 years, even as be produced such poems as "Song of South Africa" and the provocative and controversial zoology books The Soul of the Ape" and "The Soul of the White Ant." "The Guest" follows Marais's attempt to cure his addiction by sequestering himself with a farming family in the Transvaal for nine months of 1926. At the instructions of Marais's doctor, the family was to gradually decrease his daily dosage of morphine until he had been weaned from the drug. Fugard as author-actor and Ross Devenish as director dramatized the struggle with unflinching eyes. The camera bores io on Marais as he cooks his morphine, ties his arm, all scabs and bruises, and finally hits a vein. When Marais goes into withdrawai, he bullies and pleads with the family for more morphine; when they at last relent, he forces the son to inject him. Eventually,

Marais does curtail his use, but, in perhaps the most disturbing sequence in the film, just as he is on the verge of freedom, he locks himself into his room, shoots up again and exults in a private euphoria. Marais developed a philosophy to rationalize his drug addiction. In a phrase quoted during The Guest," he wrote, Pain is the condition of all existence escape from pain the purpose of all striv-ing." Fugard, too, said he found ways to intellectualize his self-destruction. He writes out of the pain of the South African experience and out of a deep personal guilt about racism, and alcohol was one road into the melancholy and meditation from which so much art springs. Ultimately, however, the road became a destination in itself, and instead of self-awareness Fugard found self-pity.

"There's oo drunk in this world - and I'm talking from experience —who doesn't become emotionally self-indulgent," Fugard said. "Alcohol and art. The myths of self-indulgence. When we were making 'The Guest.' I was still endorsing and living that romantic notion of self-destruction. But it's not true. If Dylan Thomas wasn't a drunk, he would've written more poetry, If Brendan Behan wasn't a drunk, he would've written more plays. I'm still dealing with this problem myself. The Road to Mecca' (Fugard's latest play, recently staged at the Yale Repertory Theater) was the first play I wrote without any alcohol in my system. And there were so many points where the writing went bad and the trip I used 10 lay 00 myself was. Well, if I have a whisky or two — playwright bellicose and bathetic. Whatev er pretense there was of social sipping, of celebratory champagne on opening night, Fugard also remembers nights in dives when he would huddle in a corner with his bottle while the bartender mopped up after closing. It is not surprising that the image of Marais - his addiction achieving dom nance over his talents - haunts Fugard. "The Guest," as the playwright wrote in his notebooks during the filming, "is the story of one man's hell, generated by factors within himself.

"I think that dealing with that man and that tragic history of someone who was not able to break the cycle set a challenge for my life," Fugard said. "Which I lived up to. I had many occasions in that first three months without drinking - which were hell, unmitigated hell - to think about Marais. And I realized that more appalling than a life without drink was a life in which I did damage to whatever creative gifts I have. If it was only an attempt to get sober, that and that alone, I'd still be hanging on. But I don't see myself at the edge of a precipice. I don't feel now like I'm at brink and vertigo could take over."

South Africa. The film, to be shown here from June 20 through July 3, stars John Kani and Winston Nishona, the Tony Award-winning stars of Fugard's plays "Sizwe Banzi is Dead" and "The Island."

Like most of Fugard's plays, "Marigolds" takes place in and around Port Elizabeth, his home, and, like "Sizwe Banzi" in particular, it depicts the debilitating sys-tem of pass-books, townships and mental jobs that is black life in urban South Afri-

Fugard appears in "Madrigolds" as a snake trapper named Paulus Olifant, who is classified as a colored — a person of mixed blood. The identification is hardly accidental. In several of his dramas, particularly "Boesman and Lena" and "The Blood Knot," Fugard has not only written believable black and colored characters but also has played them. In real life, he occasionally has been accused of being a col-ored man passing for a white, precisely as the character Morris Pieterson tries to do in "The Blood Knot."

Fugard's colored characters could be the South African equivalents of Joe Christmas in "Light In August" or Charles Bon in "Absalom, Absalom." For, like William Faulkner, Fugard has examined the legacy of racism through its most intimate effects. In a society of miscepenation, whether Port Elizabeth of Yoknapatawoha County, bigotry is partly self-denia

"The colored is an Afrikaner," Fugard said. "This is where the trauma for the Afrikaner starts. These people speak our language. They have Afrikaner names. They are our brothers. I think only now, in my 52d year, am I beginning to deal with the monumental guilt trip that South Africa laid on me — by being a white, by being an Afrikaner. My family did it; I did it. Circumstances have made me harshly judge South Africa, and I am judging something I love, I am judging my own

Fugard's people are not South Africans general as much as they are Afrikaners in particular. And living as an Afrikaner was a choice, not a genetic fair accompli-Born to an English-Irish father and an Afrikaner mother, he was named Harold Athol Lannigan Fugard, a synthesis of two heritages. But early on he shed Harold Lannigan — resurrecting him only as Hally in "Master Harold," — and assumed Athol Fugard, Although Pugard writes in English, he believes his view of South Africa shares more with the Afrikaans language novelist André Brink than with saich dissi tion of Fugard's life, then "Marigolds in dent English-language writers as Nadine August" furthers his examination into the Gordiner and Alan Paton.

Blood Test Dissolves Filial Bond to Hefner

The 26-year-old man whom Playboy publisher Hagh Heiner publicly accepted as his illegitimate son is not related to the magazine founder after all, Playboy officials say. In November, Hefner intro-duced Mark Wilson to the news media as his son by a woman with whom he had a sexual relationship but never married. A Playboy spokesman said no hoax was involved to the error. A few months after Heiner announced his recognition of Wilson as his son, a routine blood test showed the two men are not related.

Inguer Bergman and his "Fanny and Alexander" took three of six prizes for foreign films in Italy's David of Donatello cinema competition, jurors announced. The Swedish director was awarded one David for best director and another for the best screenplay for the film.
"Fanny and Alexander" also was chosen as the best foreign film of 1984. The David for best foreign actress went to Shirley MacLaine for her role in "Terms of Endearment," while Woody Allen was chosen as best foreign actor for "Ze-lig." Jonathan Taplin took the best producer prize for "Under Fire."

A member of the du Pont family Sunday paid $21,000 for 12 bottles of cognac in the fourth annual Napa Valley Wine Auction, which raised $402,650 for hospitals in California. Gerret Copeland of Wilmington. Delaware, purchased a case of 12 bottles of the first cognacever produced by a joint venture between the Schramsberg Napa Valley winery and Remy Martin of France. The cognac will not be put on the market until oext year. In addition to his $21,000 purchase, Copeland paid $7,600 for a 12-liter bottle of 1980 Berringer cabeing sauvignon. Copeland recently acquired an interest in Chateau Bouchain, a Napa Valley winery.

The actor James Cagney went to a hospital in Boothbay Harbor, Maine, for tests after complaining about shormess of breath, but officials said he was feeling better. Cagney, who turns 85 on July 17. was staying with his wife and family friend and agent, Marge Zim-merman, at the Fisherman's Wharf lim in the scenic resort town.
